FOUGHT PORTER ON PULLMAN CAR

A Colored School Teacher Almost Overpowered

Thrust Her Hand Through Window and Attracted Attention at Little Station.

ONCE TAUGHT IN PADUCAH

That she was forced to break out a car window with her naked hands to free herself from the grasp of a negro Pullman car porter is the allegation made by Laura May, colored, who was formerly an excellent teacher in the Paducah colored schools. The news of the woman's experience came today when a message was received by her brother, Charles Howell, a porter, living at 722 Jackson street.

According to the message Howell's sister, who is the wife of Victor May, a negro porter, on a Pullman car, between St. Louis and Chicago, left St. Louis Tuesday to visit her brother in Paducah. As she got on the train the Pullman car porter told her that he knew her husband and that she had better ride in his car. She accepted the invitation. A few miles out from St. Louis she entered the woman's dressing room, but before she could close the door the negro pushed his way in. Then for many minutes as the train sped on she was in his power. The noise kept her screams from being heard until just as the train stopped at a small station she succeeded in thrusting her right arm through the window. This attracted the attention of the white crew of the train who came to her aid. The negro was knocked down and overpowered.

It required several stitches to close the wound made in the woman's arm by the broken window.

The negro was taken from the train by the police at Carbondale, Ill., and placed in jail on a charge of criminal assault.

The woman was hurt so badly that she was unable to come to Paducah and was forced to go back to St. Louis.
